Making a Will

Planning what happens to your possessions and property after your death

Why make a Will?

Making a Will is simple, and is so important that you really should not put it off any longer. If you do not make a Will, then when you die, the law decides what will happen to your possessions, and what may happen to any young children.

Having a Will means that when you die you will have said:

- who you want to carry out your wishes
- to whom you want to leave your money and belongings, or any special heirlooms
- who will look after your children, and when they will get anything you want to leave them
- what funeral arrangements you would like

In summary, it will give you and your family peace of mind that you have control over your assets, and they go automatically to the people you want them to, rather than there being any conflict between friends and relations.

If you own a house you should also bear in mind that you may have quite a lot to leave and may wish to reduce your inheritance tax if it is applicable. A Will created with expert planning can help you do this.

How Andrew & Andrew can help you make a Will

While making a Will may appear quite easy, it is a legal document and so you should always use a lawyer.

Once you have made an appointment to see us, we can:

- tell you what the cost will be
- help you list all your property, and allow you to decide who should inherit it
- discuss potential Inheritance Tax implications
- prepare your Will and then store it securely for you
- contact you at future dates to see whether you would like to make any changes to your Will

We can arrange to visit you if you find this easier, enabling instructions to be taken in your comfortable environment.
